

The process of teaching the Russian language at the university is a purposeful, consistently changing interaction between the teacher and students, during which the tasks of education, upbringing, personality development and the formation of communication competence of students are solved.

The formation of communicative competence is associated with the development of speech skills, the ability to communicate by language in Russian and the assimilation of a certain amount of language material (phonetic, lexical, grammatical). For the successful assimilation of the basic norms of the modern Russian and vocational-oriented language in the pedagogical practice of a university teacher, traditional and new forms of education are used, such as mass open online courses (MOOC).

MOOC provides for mass interactive participation using e-learning technologies and open access via the Internet. This is an optimal platform for educational interethnic communication, allowing students to communicate on thematic forums with teachers and other students.

The use of MOOCs ensures more efficient organization of the educational process, accessibility and mobility of training, the implementation of professional and personal goals of the teacher, as well as resource efficiency.

In the 2023-24 academic year, the creation of three mass online courses posted on edu.kstu.kz. was planned and completed.
